Every broccoli variety offered through seed catalogs in 1900 has now disappeared. As the international genetics supply industry absorbs seed companies—with nearly one thousand takeovers since 1970—this trend toward uniformity seems likely to continue; and as third world agriculture is brought in line with international business interests, the gene pools of humanity's most basic foods are threatened. The consequences are more than culinary. Without the genetic diversity from which farmers traditionally breed for resistance to diseases, crops are more susceptible to the

the law? Or are there some behaviors which so weaken a society that common beliefs about to influence lawmaking, it is imperative: ". . .

to enforce any morality.
Others invoke John Stuart Mill's doctrine that the only purpose for laws governing any member of society is to prevent harm to others,
