In the West African nation of Togo, applying for the U.S. Diversity Visa Lottery is a national obsession, with hundreds of thousands of Togolese entering each year. From the street frenzy of the lottery sign-up period and the scramble to raise money for the embassy interview to the gamesmanship of those adding spouses and dependents to their dossiers, the application process is complicated, expensive, and unpredictable. In The Fixer Charles Piot follows Kodjo Nicolas Batema, a Togolese visa broker—known as a “fixer”—as he shepherds his clients through the application and interview process. Relaying the experiences of the fixer, his clients, and embassy officials, Piot captures the ever-evolving cat-and-mouse game between the embassy and the hopeful Togolese as well as the disappointments and successes of lottery winners in the United States. These detailed and compelling stories uniquely illustrate the desire and savviness of migrants as they work to find what they hope will be a better life.

One of the most pervasive myths of U.S. immigration law is that marriage to a U.S. citizen confers citizenship, or at least some form of legal status, upon a foreign national. It is an intuitive notion: that a U.S. citizen enjoys, as part of his or her package of privileges and protections, the right to live anywhere in the United States with a spouse of his or her choosing, and to confer automatically some form of legal status upon that spouse. It comes as a surprise and an affront to many U.S. citizens that their immigration laws do not always comport with this notion. The fact is that no marriage-based adjustment of a foreign national's immigration status occurs automatically. And significant problems arise for families in which the foreign national spouse entered the United States without inspection. Under current immigration law, foreign nationals who entered the United States without inspection are ineligible to apply for lawful permanent residency in the United States, irrespective of the existence of an approved petition submitted by a U.S. citizen spouse. Such individuals must instead depart the United States and apply for an immigrant visa abroad. This is much more than an inconvenience involving travel and temporary separation from loved ones. Another immigration provision bars any foreign national who has been unlawfully present in the United States for one year or longer from reentering the United States for ten years upon his or her departure from the United States. Only a waiver granted on account of “extreme hardship” to the U.S. citizen spouse can overcome the bar. This Article reviews and critiques the reentry bars and advocates for the resurrection of section 245(i) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, which, prior to its expiration in 1998, allowed undocumented immigrants who married U.S. citizens to adjust their status in the United States rather than have to depart the United States and apply for an immigrant visa abroad. The Article argues that the combined effects of the reentry bars and the unavailability of 245(i) upon the current generation of U.S. citizens seeking to sponsor undocumented immigrant spouses are overly harsh and constitutionally suspect. The Article concludes that truly comprehensive immigration reform legislation must include a permanent reinstatement of 245(i) for immediate relatives of U.S. citizens.

Every year, more than 100,000 applicants are selected and receive United States Permanent Residency through the Lottery system. While there are numerous other books that describe various methods of obtaining green cards, or general ways of obtaining one, no other book in the market currently covers this subject with as much detail.

While the United States remains a nation of immigrants, the path to citizenship is not an easy one—and in fact has become more difficult in recent years. In clear, readable language, this volume explains in detail every step an individual must take to obtain a nonimmigrant visa, an immigrant visa leading to permanent residency, or actual citizenship. This book is essential reading for anyone involved with immigration—whether for themselves, a relative, or an employee. Examples of common immigration forms for the individual and for families are included and a list is provided of the most important websites for immigration issues.

Migration and stratification are increasingly intertwined. One day soon it will be impossible to understand one without the other. Both focus on life chances. Stratification is about differential life chances - who gets what and why - and migration is about improving life chances - getting more of the good things of life. To examine the interconnections of migration and stratification, we address a mix of old and new questions, carrying out analyses newly enabled by a unique new data set on recent legal immigrants to the United States (the New Immigrant Survey). We look at immigrant processing and lost documents, depression due to the visa process, presentation of self, the race-ethnic composition of an immigrant cohort (made possible by the data for the first time since 1961), black immigration from Africa and the Americas, skin-color diversity among couples formed by U.S. citizen sponsors and immigrant spouses, and English fluency among children age 8-12 and their immigrant parents. We find, inter alia, that children of previously illegal parents are especially more likely to be fluent in English, that native-born U.S. citizen women tend to marry darker, that immigrant applicants who go through the visa process while already in the United States are more likely to have their documents lost and to suffer visa depression, and that immigration, by introducing accomplished black immigrants from Africa (notably via the visa lottery), threatens to overturn racial and skin color associations with skill. Our analyses show the mutual embeddedness of migration and stratification in the unfolding of the immigrants' and their children's life chances and the impacts on the stratification structure of the United States. -- immigration ; immigrant visas ; social stratification ; gender ; race ; Hispanic origin ; skin color ; presentation of self ; visa depression ; illegal experience ; English fluency ; spouse selection ; children of immigrants ; nativity premium ; New Immigrant Survey
