The thesis looks at the graphic design of the album cover from its inception to see how this period changed the mode of thinking regarding the design and sales of LPs from that time onwards. It looks at aspects like the events surrounding the 1960s, with particular reference to the baby boomers, the drug scene and the effects of colour television, which had the biggest impact on album covers of this generation. The changes that occurred had an effect on the music as well and therefore affected how illustrations were presented on the covers.
