peritoneal carcinoma and my journey began taking the path no one dares to trod. It started with LVM, then colds and fever. When I consulted my family physicians, I was sent to a CT Scan and then was advised to go be admitted in the hospital. Then in the hospital I had again I had series of medical check-ups, after which the Ob-gyn told me that I would have an open surgery in order to find out what was really wrong with my abdomen After my first surgical procedure, I was informed about some internal organs that should be removed but what I so sad of was that I had a colostomy. Thank God my colostomy was only temporary, it was of Hartmann operation. But even then the rituals of the stoma care were very difficult for me. I had cried everytime I cleaned the stoma and changed the pouching bag Before I was discharged in the hospital, the surgeon told me that I had a malignant ovarian cancer and peritoneal carcinom. Then I was advised to consult the oncologist. The first cycle of chemotherapy was scheduled on my birthday. One could just imagine how I felt. I had three major surgeries and six cycles of chemotherapy. During my first surgery, my left ovary, appendix and a part of my big intestine were removed. During my second surgery, I was hoping that my colostomy would be reversed, but to my dismay, it was

This is a book for tall people, those who relate to them, and anyone interested in height in general. Being tall coincides with considerable professional, athletic, and social benefits. Yet there are also some problems, and these raise some questions. For instance, if longer levers and more cells really are behind increased risk of injuries and cancer, then how is it that giraffes get by? And why is it that society reveres tall stature but then compromises our safety with cramped cars and other things? And, as tall women might be pondering, where have all the tall, dark, and handsome men gone? Lastly, what can be done about all this? These questions and more will all be answered by a tall protagonist over eight chapters: Evolution, Scaling, Spine, Manufactured, Ergonomics, Growth, Longevity, and Society.

apartheid South Africa to the desk of The Daily Show began with a criminal act: his birth. Trevor was born to a white Swiss father and a black Xhosa mother at a time when such a union was punishable by five years in prison. Living proof of his parents' indiscretion, Trevor was kept mostly indoors for the earliest years of his life, bound by the extreme and often absurd measures his mother took to hide him from a government that could, at any moment, steal him away. Finally liberated by the end of South Africa's tyrannical white rule, Trevor and his mother set forth on a grand adventure, living openly and freely and embracing the opportunities won by a centuries-long struggle. It is also the story of that young man's relationship with his fearless, rebellious, and fervently religious mother—his teammate, a woman determined to save her son from the cycle of poverty, violence, and abuse that would ultimately threaten her own life. The stories collected here are by turns hilarious, dramatic, and deeply affecting. Whether subsisting on caterpillars for dinner during hard times, being thrown from a moving car during an attempted kidnapping, or just trying to survive the life-and-death pitfalls of dating in high school, Trevor illuminates his curious world with an
