In a work of this general nature it is impossible to avoid error. All that can be expected of the Author is a diligent collection and faithful use of the best materials. To accomplish this we have spared neither labour nor expense, yet none can be more sensible than we ourselves that some descriptions will be found defective and some statements erroneous. To the Heads of the various departments of the General Government, and to all the gentlemen who have obligingly furnished us with information, we tender our sincere thanks. We shall be much obliged by any communications which will enable us to improve a future edition. About the software. The Star Book Ten is the latest version of computer telescope control using star map graphics as a user interface, first introduced in the original Star Book first offered in 2003. The increasingly complicated nature of this software means that learning to optimize this program is not straightforward, and yet the resulting views when all features are correctly deployed can be phenomenal. After a short history of computerized Go-To telescopes for the consumer amateur astronomer market, Chen offers a treasury of technical

The Navigator's Pocket-Book
Despite the findings on global climate change presented by the scientific community, there remains a significant gap between its recommendations and the actions of the public and policy makers. So far scientists and the media have failed to successfully communicate the urgency of the climate change situation in such a way that long-term, comprehensive, and legally binding policy commitments are being made on the national and international level. This book examines the way the public processes information, how they perceive threats and other perceptual factors that have a significant effect on how and to what degree climate change mitigation and adaptation strategies are supported. Understanding public risk perception plays a vital role in communicating the challenges of global climate change. Using a diverse range of international case studies, this book explores the nature of public perceptions of climate change and identifies the perception factors which have a significant impact on the public's willingness to support global climate change policies or commit to behavioral changes to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and improve urban resiliency. The comparative study of social and cultural factors, beliefs, attitudes and trust provides an international overview of best practices regarding the design, implementation and generation of public support for climate change policies at a global level. Offering valuable insight into climate change and risk communication, the book should be of interest to students and scholars of environment studies, politics, urban planning, and media and cultural studies. Guide and Instructor for the Navigator, Containing Four Hundred Adequate Definitions in Addition to All the Practical Rules for Working Middle Latitude There are many voluminous and bewildering works on the subject of navigation, but up to the present time there has not existed a series of short, simple laws founded on correct principles and expressed in homely language, whereby the navigator might quickly develop his position under various conditions at sea and along shore. In this little volume has been incorporated every practical formula for determining

For finding latitude by stellar altitudes (which circumstances not infrequently render desirable at sea) I have referred to the American Ephemeris for the declination of the fixed stars instead of to the English tables; and have also followed the star-notation of the former. I have used a portion of the latter only in the problems for exercise in this work. I would call the student's special attention to the system of finding simultaneously latitude and longitude by double altitude; a system not to be found in any American work that I have seen, and one upon which too much
