The Psychosocial Imaginaries of Defence Nationalism interrogates the emergence of far-right nationalist 'defence leagues' in Australia and the UK. Throughout the book, Liam Gillespie refers to these groups as defence nationalists: that is, as nationalists who imagine themselves as defenders of the nation and therefore national subjects par excellence. Drawing on original research, psychoanalytic and psychosocial theory—and particularly the work of Jacques Lacan—the author explores the narratives, imaginaries and subjectivities that sustain these groups, as well as the narratives, imaginaries and subjectivities these groups sustain. He argues that unlike other nationalist groups, defence nationalists are not primarily concerned with realising their avowed political projects. Instead, they are concerned with constructing and then enjoying themselves as the nation's self-ordained defenders. This means that which threatens the nation can paradoxically have a fortifying effect upon defence nationalists, legitimising and securing both the way they see themselves, and the position they see themselves occupying with/in the nation. The Psychosocial Imaginaries of Defence Nationalism will be of interest to anyone concerned with critical theorisations of contemporary nationalism, as well as with the application of psychoanalytic and psychosocial theory to social, cultural and political analysis.

Electricite du Liban (EDL) is the sole player in Lebanon's energy sector. As a vertically integrated state-owned monopoly, EDL controls the generation, transmission and distribution of electricity in Lebanon. As a State Owned Enterprise, EDL suffers from severe financial and operational mismanagement. As a result, EDL fails to deliver a reliable power supplies to the Lebanese population. The power infrastructure has further been significantly impacted by the country's civil war, which ran from 1974 to 1990. More than nineteen years after the end of the war, EDL still has significant operating inefficiencies and is continually incurring annual losses. Major problems in bill collection have not been solved and electricity theft is still an issue. The generating capacity is partly obsolete and needs significant repairs. Although electricity rationing has been gradually reduced after the end of the war, consumers still suffer frequent scheduled and unscheduled power outages. The Lebanese government tried numerous times to launch much needed administrative reforms before deciding the privatization implementation. In fact, the parliament voted for two new laws, the Privatization law no 228 dated May 31, 2000, and the Electricity law or the Law of Electricity sector Organization no 462 dated September 5, 2002, in order to induce the reform of the electricity market, from a regulated national monopoly into a competitive market. Nevertheless, all efforts remained in vain, the laws were not applied, and no improvement of the EDL performance was registered. This paper provides a comprehensive reform proposal for the Lebanese Government, tailored to suit the Lebanese case, focusing on four major restructuring steps or milestones for the Lebanese Electric Power Sector: "Corporatization", "Divisonalization", "Unbundling" and finally "Private Sector Participation."

This paper investigates the causal impact of the change in Brazil's child labor law of December 1998. The change increased the minimum legal age of entry into the labor force from 14 to 16 years. The analysis uses a difference-in-differences approach to estimate the impact of this change in the law on labor force participation rates as a whole, as well as for the formal and informal sectors separately. The results show that the ban reduced participation rates for boys by 4 percentage points and that this effect was mostly driven by the informal sector. No effect is found for girls.
