Over the last ten years, it has become increasingly obvious that sudden death represents the major challenge confronting cardiology in the last part of the XXth Century. Careful epidemiologic studies have established the magnitude of this overall important problem of public health. The frequent association of sudden death with coronary artery disease has been demonstrated. Some of the electrophysiologic mechanisms underlying lethal arrhythmias have been unveiled. In addition, clinical markers permitting identifica tion of high risk individuals have emerged. Finally, different studies have raised some hope as to the ability of therapeutic interventions to protect these patients against a premature and possibly evitable demise. Over the years, a sizable amount of new and relevant information, both basic and clinical, has become available. We felt therefore that a conference on sudden death might be timely. It was decided to organize a small gathering during which experts from different disciplines in cardiology could sit together in a quiet retreat to share their knowledge and discuss issues pertaining to research and therapy that might be of benefit to patients. The conference was held in Liege, on May 7, 8 and 9, 1979. This three day meeting in which re presentatives from seven different countries participated was extremely stimulating. The discussions were very lively and sometimes reflected the divergence of opinion which may persist on some topics.

Nathan's sex life has always been fulfilling, but he can't help be intrigued when he's given an enigmatic card leading him to a mysterious mansion on the edge of town, promising ecstasy beyond imagining. He enters, expecting a bevy of seductive young women, but finds only a small vial of strange liquid - one that transforms him into a beautiful and sexy woman. Surrounded by the smoldering eyes of half-naked men, Nathan finds himself in over his head - and on his back.Suddenly a Woman is a story for mature audiences, and contains scenes of sex change, m/m/f sex, oral sex. It is 6400+ words in length.An excerpt of this story:A new spotlight flooded on another twenty paces into the room we were in, illuminating a circular bed, wide enough for five people. My heart caught as I saw it. Now that's what I'm talking about. You don't have a bed that sized for me and the angel. No, that's for a group! As a pleasant buzz began to hum through my veins, warm and heady, I almost skipped my way to the bed ahead of the angel. It was hard not to start stripping on the way, but I didn't want to seem too eager here.My foot hit the tile and slid on the next stop, sending me wobbling as a numb, hazy feeling flowed through me. I tried to gasp, but my jaw moved as if I were swimming in molasses. I toppled with agonizing slowness, slumping down and to my side like someone had flipped a switch and kicked off the lights. My palms squeaked against the cool tile as heat blossomed within me, sudden and fierce, sweat flashing across my exposed skin in an instant. I tried to push up onto my hands, but they lay there ahead of me twitching."Don't fight it," the angel whispered in my ear. I flicked my eyes to stare at her, unable to move my head. I could see her on her knees beside me, smiling as she smoothed my hair with one delicate hand, her costume wings fluttering a little with each motion. My heart pounded sweet fiery pleasure through my body, a tingle racing to the tips of my fingers. The feeling was harrowing, yet pleasant at the same time, ripping through me and suffusing my body with the warmth of the sun. "Enjoy this. Trust me. Embrace it."My skin rippled. I could feel it as I lay there pressed to the cool tile. My chest shifted and twisted, skin bulging and twisting beneath me. I could feel my muscles undulating just below the surface, lengthening a bit here, shortening a bit there. I wanted to scream, I wanted to shout, I wanted to do anything but lay there as my body contorted against my will. Still the angel knelt beside me, her costume sexy and perfect, one hand stroking my searing hot skin. I kicked at the floor as my back arched involuntarily, flipping me over so I was staring up into the yawning darkness above. I watched in horror as my shirt billowed upward, the buttons straining as my chest rose and grew. I clawed at them, sending a few skipping off of the tile, ripping the shirt free and revealing a pair of amazing breasts. I stared, jaw working but no sound managing to come forth. My angel let out a satisfied purr beside me and helped me to my trembling feet.

This dissertation examines circulating popular beliefs in early modern Spain that addressed sex difference and the possibility of sudden sex changes due to fluctuations in climate and humors. These beliefs are articulated by authors of medical treatises and other texts that deal with human anatomy, health and wellness, and natural phenomena. Understanding how early modern Spaniards conceived of sex and gender is crucial for analyzing the reception and representation of historical and literary figures with non-normative sex and gender during this time period. The central thesis of this project is that early modern Spaniards accepted the possibility that an individual might experience a sudden change of sex, and therefore understood human sex to be mutable, rather than fixed, and to some extent, spectral rather than binary, given that said sex changes were believed to leave an individual with vestigial characteristics of their original sex. Therefore, in order to understand how historical and literary figures with non-binary sex and/or gender were understood, for example, Catalina de Erauso, or the theatrical figure of the mujer varonil, we must take into account these beliefs, as they would have played a role in the reception of said figures. In order to arrive at a better understanding of how non-normative sex and gender were explained, understood and represented in early modern Spain, I consider three different perspectives. The first of these are the medical and scientific theories that informed popular beliefs about sex and gender. Many texts were published in early modern Spain in which these topics are examined at great length, suggesting the importance and relevance for the authors and their perceived audiences. The second perspective concerns the reception and perception of historical figures whose sex and gender did not adhere to a strict binary. The documents written by and about individuals such as Catalina de Erauso and Eleno/a de Cespedes shine light on how they understood and explained themselves, as well as how they were understood by those who knew them. At various points in both cases, references are made to the popular beliefs found in the medical texts I consider in my first chapter. Finally, I look to theatrical representations of particularly masculine female characters, or instances of the mujer varonil, a popular figure in the Golden Age comedia who, in some cases, shares characteristics with the descriptions of masculine women found in the medical treatises as well as descriptions of historical figures with non-normative sex and gender.
