Captain Roland Warvold tells Alexa and Yipes about the adventures he shared with his brother Thomas in Elyon, before the wall went up and divided the world in two. Jamie Bennett knew that warrior angel Ambrose Griffin was hers from the moment she learned that the things that go bump in the night are real. She, along with her friends, was forever changed the night the lightning struck and altered her fate. But what she doesn't know is that while Ambrose might be hers, she's missing someone else. Ambrose always holds himself back because he can't afford to lose anyone else. He's lived and lost lifetimes over as he's fought for his people, and though he knows that Jamie could be his if he takes that risk, there's something missing. Or, more accurately, someone. When Jamie is kidnapped and sent to hell, Ambrose will not only risk a war between spectacled eyes, F. Scott Fitzgerald's 1925 American masterpiece roars to life in K. Woodman-Maynard's exquisite graphic novel—among the first adaptations of the book in this genre. Painted in lush watercolors, the inventive interpretation emphasizes both the extravagance and mystery of the characters, as well as the fluidity of Nick Carraway's unreliable narration. Excerpts from the original text wend through the illustrations, and imagery and metaphors are taken to literal, and often whimsical, extremes, such as when a beautiful partygoer blooms into an orchid and Daisy Buchanan pushes Gatsby across the sky on a cloud. In this innovative fantasy adventure we encounter a mysterious talking bear and a small diverse group of humans crossing a continent to rescue a distant city state from the grasp of a tyrant; but their return home is put in jeopardy by one of the defeated enemy's vengeful creatures. 'The Ancestral Warrior' is a unique combination of fantasy, action, mystery and adventure quest, set in a parallel universe. The eastern city state of Karwaat is ruled by a tyrannical usurper, a renegade priest who has heightened his hypnotic skills through paranormal means. A Karwaatian academic, who dabbles in the occult, sends a captive djinn called Abu Dib to faraway Norland. This academic has read a legend about a warrior bear who once lived there and defeated a similar usurper. He believes that such a bear may still exist. He instructs the djinn to find and bring that bear to Karwaat. Having reached Norland, Abu Dib meets a young sheep farmer called Jo and, through her, a bear called Boris who works as a farmhand and is no warrior. Nevertheless, with the help of an exiled prince and his counselor, they muster a team of five comrades to escort Boris to Karwaat: Hermon, disgruntled son of the exiled prince; Lula, his romantically-inclined twin sister; Arthur, a dour woodsman; Neville, a hen-pecked village grocer; and Jo herself. Another comrade, called Rex, brother of a local lord, joins them along the way to Karwaat. The comrades cross nine countries - passing through cities and villages, forests and deserts, above and below ground. They travel on foot; by horse and by camel; in carriages and on steam-trains; and on a stinking, sea-going vessel transporting bird guano. Shortly after this, Jo kills the semi-parasitic mate of one of the enemy's creatures, an aquatic monster known as the Leviathan. Abu Dib now rewards each comrade with a 'magical' gift. The Leviathan pursues Jo during the comrades' homeward journey, seeking revenge. It arrives at her home town in Norland as the morning market is in full swing, causing pandemonium. But, although driven off for the time being, so long as it survives Jo's life is in danger. The comrades now devise a plan to destroy it using guile and high explosives. But the outcome is a mixed blessing for Lula. She was instrumental in its defeat, using the gift of telepathy given her by the djinn, and is ashamed of having used it to lure a sentient being to its death. misunderstandings. That between Jo and Hermon eventually prospers; that between Lula and Rex fades gracefully. The magical aspects of the story are firmly grounded in a precise realism. The ecological and geopolitical traditions, religions and technologies found in the different countries are described in sufficient depth to give verisimilitude to the make-believe continent across which the story roams.
